I was thinking

Dear Fellow Traveller,

This weekend we celebrate our Grandparents both those still with us and those gone to God. We give thanks for the role they played in our lives. We combine it with celebrating all our Senior Citizens, those who recently may have been granted the “Bus Pass”, to those who have reached the status of being a “Super-Senior” (80+).

Looking back at my grandparents, I remember them to be competent, wise and slower than Mom and Dad. While as children we learn the basics skills of life from our parents and teachers, much of the “colour” came from our grandparents and older generation.

I keep on thinking of what a grandparent is. We expect them to be competent, kind and loving. But generally they play a much bigger roll than that. Grandparents help us to explore the wonders of life while keeping our feet on the ground. They can expose children to the excitement of discovery. A grandparent is not a substitute minder (though at times their help is vital). They are in many instances artists and poets. Their multifaceted experiences of life can stir the little minds around them with wonder and ideas. They can help in preparing the children to be the best they can be – to be fine and full human beings. No course of studies can do that – schooling only provides a framework. The excitement can only come from big minds and big hearts and very big imaginations. If older generations don't think and imagine; the young ones won't become alert and alive to the bigger world of beauty and humility where we all appreciate, enjoy and learn from each other.

I forget who said the ideal is that three generations working together produce the best in all of us.

Have a good week

World Meeting of Families – Dublin 2018

Pope Francis has announced that the next World Meeting of Families will take place in 2018 in Dublin. In conjunction with this major Conference on “The Family” our parish is hoping to organize a group to co-ordinate a series of events to celebrate and promote the Family at a local level. We would love to hear from individuals who might be willing and interested in becoming involved . Give a call to the Parish Office if you can help or contact the Parish Team. G,J..
